

CHRISTINE

PICTURE: DOREEN SPOONER

FEW THINGS are more intriguing than an old headline walking. Christine Jorgensen arrived in London yesterday, the embodiment of Where They Are Now. Christine got a lifetime's share of the Front Pages in 1952. She was the GI called George who underwent the world's first sex-change operation. Now forty-four, she flew from New York with all the assured celebrity glow of a Hollywood movie matron. There was the fur coat, sparkling rings and belief in her absolute right to make an instant pronouncement on anything. She is here because she was technical adviser on a film about her life (or lives?) which opens in London on Monday Her interest is a percentage on the take. An eighteen-year-old, John Hansen, plays both the male and female Miss Jorgensen. "He's all boy," she remarked. She went on to state she is happier as a woman than as a boy, adding: "Not 100 per cent. happy. Is anyone?"
