

HOW SAD that Sandra Irvine should have lost her baby, stillborn.

She is the Plymouth girl who so loved another woman and so wanted a baby to make their odd family complete that she forced herself into affairs with men she hardly knew in order to become pregnant.

Her extraordinary story was told exclusively in this newspaper a few weeks ago.

What a reflection it is on the society we are building today that after her grievous loss Miss Irvine should say this: 'It will probably look to a lot of people as if God is punishing us.'

I should not like to think that. SUNDAY INDEPENDENT 21/4/82
