THE BASIS OF SEXUAL IDENTITY

By Shari Roan, Health Writer, LA Times, March 14, 1997

PARTI

It was considered a medical triumph 33 years ago when John became Joan. John was 8 months old when his penis was accidentally destroyed during minor surgery to correct a problem with the foreskin. Doctors advised his horrified parents to raise the child as a girl, and surgery to create female anatomy followed shortly thereafter.

The 1964 operation made headlines around the world—It also became the standard of practice in cases involving freak accidents fike John's or when children are born with severely deformed genitals, a rare defect occurring in about 1 out of every 100,000 births.

Now, however, two doctors involved with John's case from the stan have tracked the results, and they say the decision to raise John as a girl was all wrong

John, who reverted to being a male as a teenager, had always felt he was a boy, even though he was called Joan, wore dresses and had female genitals, say the anthors of the report, published today in the Archives of Pediatric and Adolescent Medicine

In addition to calling into question the practice of sex reassignment, as the treatment is called, the case yields valuable insight about what it means to be male or female. It also provides stark evidence that a person's brain predetermines sexual (gender) identity—not one's anatomy or social environment, experts say

"The question this case doesn't answer but lends data to is. What is the origin of gender identity? How do we know we are a girl? How do we know we are a hoy? And when do we know it? says Dr. William Reiner, a child psychiatrisi at the Johns Hopkins Hospital in Baltimore, where John was treated. "John, in spite of heing ratsed as a girl and being treated with homiones and estrogen, said, "Forget it. I'm a boy."

"Children who undergo sex reassignment provide a unique opportunity to explore the complexities of sexuality," says Remer. While only one case, John's story is particularly strong restimony that the roots of sexual identity lie deep inside the brain, as more recent scientific studies have attested. Even as a child, Joan, who had not been fold what happened, said she "Telt like a trapped animal."

That was not what doctors would have predicted three decades ago, when notions of sexuality were much different. In proposing the sex-change surgery, doctors told John's parents that infants were sexually neutral at hirth and that children learned their gender as they grew up and as hormonal influences kicked in at puthenty.

"The teaching has been to convert these children because you can surgically construct a sexually functioning female but you can't surgically reconstruct a child to function as a male," says Reiner, who wrote an editorial accompanying the report

Moreover many experts believed that a male child could not grow up psychologically health without a penis — an assumption not supported by data, Remer says. Doctors have also assumed, until the past decade of so that a child will reflect its upbringing.

"Doctors haven't been doing this willy-nilly. They have tried to do what they think is the right thing," says Milton Diamond, co-author of the report and an expert in anatomy and psychology at the Pacific Center for Sex and Society, University of Hawaii-Manoa. Diamond served as a consultant to the BBC in its coverage of the case in the 1960s and 1970s.

Indeed, the surgery on John was followed by a host of reports on the case touring it as a success. A 1973-Time Magazine article noted. "This dramatic case provides strong support that conventional patterns of masculine and feminine behavior can be ahered. It also casts doubt on the theory that major sex differences psychological and well as anatomical, are immutably set by the genes at conception."

The case was quickly written into textbooks on pediatrics, psychiatry and sexuality -- where it remains today -- as an example that gender should be based on an infant's anatomy, not on chromosomes of the individual's feelings about his or her sexuality.

"The case led to a lot of excitement that this could even be done," Reiner says "it was a very difficult clinical situation that could now be handled. It created a lot of enthusiasm and, probably, relief in the medical world."

The case received little attention, however, until the retrospection published today, which is heartbreaking in its portrayal of John's and his family's suffering.

The article is based on interviews in 1994 and 1995 with John, his wife and his mother. According to Diamond, John wanted his story told although he requested the use of the pseudonyms John and Joan.

The article suggests that the sex reassignment was wrong from the outset

John's mother recalled "As soon as he had the surgery, the doctor said I should now start treating him as a girl, doing girl things, and putting him in girl's clothes. But that was a disaster I put this beautiful little dress on him and he [immediately tried] to rip if off. I think he knew it was a dress and that it was for girls and he wasn't a sirl "(To be concluded next month)

LAMBERT HOUSE SEEKING VOLUNTEERS

Lambert House is an activities and resource center for gay, lesbian, bisexual, transgender and questioning youth ages 14-22. The center is located at 15th and Denny on Capitol Hill. The goal of Lambert House is to foster an increased sense of self, capability and resilience among sexual minority (GLBT) youth through the development of personal social and life skills. We approach this mission through educational and informalive resources such as tutoring, a youth computer lab, community presentations and discussions, recreational activities such as an artist in residence program and group outings, youth leadership opportunities, a jobs board, community internships, and support groups. In addition, Lambert House offers an unstructured dtop-in center, where youth find support from peers and adult volunteers and are able to get information about teterrals to local social service programs.

Lambert House is seeking adult volunteers age 25 and up to supervise the drop-in center, teach youth computer skills, participate in and provide transportation to activities, and greet youth and adult visitors to the center. Volunteers receive extensive training. They also need volunteers for office and donation assistance. If you wish to help, please contact Lynne at application materials.

SAN FRANCISCO GLBT MUSEUM SEEKING INPUT (COURTESY JAMES GREEN, FTM NEWSLETTER)

The Gay and Lesbian Historical Society (GLHS) has an important collection of transgender material, including the personal papers of Lou Sullivan (one of the founders of the GLHS), and extensive runs of transgender publications like the FTM Newsletter, Metamorphosis Monthly, and many other more obscure items of interest to the transgender community. They are also trying to add transgender voices to their rapidly expanding oral history collection on audiotape. History Professor Joanne Meyerowitz of the University of Cincinnati has recently been availed a grant from the Social Science Research Council (SSRC) that will fund a project at the GLHS in San Francisco to record and transcribe oral histories of transsexuals who transitioned before 1970, both MTF and FTM.

If you or anyone you know would like to contribute an interview to this project, please contact Joanne Meyerowitz, her Bay Area research collaborator Susan Stryker, or Lyndall of the Oral History Project

If you transitioned after 1970 and would still like to make a contribution to the preservation of transgender history, there are many other opportunities at the GLHS. You could donate historically significant material from any period about being transgendered in the Bay Area or beyond (diaries, correspondence, organizational records, photos of special events). Pethaps you have some great stories to tell that could be included in another GLHS oral history collection other than the one being funded by the SSRC. Or maybe you'd like to volunteer at the GLHS and learn how to collect, organize and preserve archival material or how to conduct oral histories.

Contact the GLHS at (415) 777-5455, they're open to the public on Saturday and Sunday Afternoons from 2 00-5 00 and by special appointment. Joanne Meyerowitz can be reached at Susan Stryker can be reached at Lyndall McCowan can be reached at And the Oral History project has its own email box at gllsvoices @aol.com

FROM THE FOUNDER

By Mursha C. Botzer, MA

It is a joy to report that our groups are expanding in both numbers and in topics of discussion. Each week we see people at work on the questions of personal gender identity. The intellectual activity is mirrored by the activism, as more people come forward to participate in the ongoing struggle for equality. Here are some of the things that are happening.

Individuals from our communities of gender are volunteering to work on new projects like youth support, expanding the hours of service at the Center and developing fresh topics for the Weekend Events. In addition, we have been active in the political arena. Volunteers have joined the signature gathering efforts of Equity Washington/I lands Off Washington. This is in response to a history making initiative that has been filed here in Washington State. Initiative 677 would stop job discrimination in the State, bringing the same rights in employment to all citizens. This means that no longer will it be legal to fire a person just because of their sexual or gender orientation. As in most states, it is still legal to fire someone for these teasons. And we are part of this Initiative. For the first time gender identity is included in this kind of legislation in the State. Many people have worked toward making this Initiative inclusive, as a Board member of Equality Washington/I lands Off Washington, I made every effort to assure that we would be included

A new independent group has been formed to allow our folks to become more politically involved in the day to day work of social activism. This group is made up of gender folk and exists to support the same rights for us all. I am very proud of their efforts.

Recently, I met with Seattle Chief of Police, Norm Stamper, and had a very positive discussion about the needs of transgendered people in this city. Chief Stamper was interested and supportive and quite well informed about the general efforts of transgender equality. He is a partner in our work, a friend of our Communities.

On Morch 25, 1997. I met with the Secretary of Washington State's Department of Social and Health Services (DSHS). Lyfe Quasing Here is another ally for us in our work. He understands the needs that transgender people have when approaching State services for assistance. I also met with his Senior Assistant Secretaries in charge of the various divisions of DSHS, such as Medical Assistance, Children's Administration and Aging and Adult Services. All the department heads were open and willing to learn of our needs and how we might be better served.

The work goes on and I am encouraged by the results we are achieving. I am so pleased to see so thany of our own folks coming forward to be part of these tasks at the same time. I know we must never forget that we exist to help individuals discover themselves and liberate themselves from the confusing bonds of gender. That is Ingersoll's mission, now and always

HEY, GOOD COOKIN'!

This month, a reprint of a wonderful Weekend treat. Good with coffiee, tea, or cocoa.

E-> Upside Down Cinnamon Buns Ingredients:

Two "tubes" of prepared buttennilk biscuits
I cube of your favorite margarine
(or Butter if you're feeling really decadent)
½ Cup of Raisins, ½ Cup of chopped nuts
½ cup of brown sugar, Cinnamon, Nutineg and Cloves to taste.
Very Important: a non-stick frying pan or cake pan
Approximately 7" across

Preparation:

Preheat oven to 325 degrees. Cut margarine or butter into patties and arrange on the bottom of your pan. Sprinkle the brown sugar and spices over the margarine or butter. Sprinkle nuts and raisins over the brown sugar and spices.—This will become your topping! Arrange biscuits on top of the 'topping'. Important: use all of the biscuits. Jam them into place if necessary. Put into 325 degree oven and bake for about 25 minutes or until the biscuits are golden brown on the top—or bottom—well, you know what I mean.

Presentation:

When done, remove from oven and allow to sit for 5 minutes. Take a knife or plastic spatula and go around the edge to make sure that none of the biscuits are sticking. Place plate over pan and carefully invert, and Voilá, instant Cinnamon Pull-Apart.

A Special Thanks to D. M. & A.

SHE'S NO DOCTOR!!

by Jennette Caden, editor -- CrossPort InnerView Cincinnati, Ohio

We in Dayton are (un)fortunate enough to heat syndicated radio talk show host "Dr." Laura Schlessinger. (The "Dr." is in quotes, because her PhD is in physiology, not psychology or psychiatry. Her lack of such a degree doesn't seem to matter when she plays "shrink" to a caller.)

According to Cindy Martin on TG Forum (on the Internet). Schlessinger, who prefers to be called "Dr. Lama", had a cull from a male CD. Married for 15 years, he stated he has been diessing secretly. This (naturally) created tremendors guilt feelings about this, and he asked her whether or not he should tell his wife. The conservative Schlessinger said, "No". OK, no problem here, this is American talk radio, and that's her opinion.

Where I get my feathers ruffled is the reason WHY she said be should not tell his spouse. It seems Schlessinger proceeded to tell him cross-dressing is 'deviant and pervented', and he would 'cruelly and unduly burden his family with this dirty little secret' if he told his wife. Excuse me a moment? This is competent mental health advice? This brand of 'pseudo-psychology' could single-handedly increase the stricide rate!

The really sad part is that the Jerry Springer stereotype of the 'psycho' eross-dresser is once again reinforced by someone who should definitely know better. Too many of her listeners think her advice it 'true and genuine' (like 'professional' wrestling is real!" when the fact is that THIS IS ENTERTAINMENT, not reality! (She also chides women drily for working when they have children at home yet she is a Career woman' herself with an 8-year old son at home! Can you say, HYPOCRITE, too?)

The Dayton radio station runs a commercial for her show, saving how she 'tells you the truth' and you can 'get a reality check' by listening to her. Truth' Oh, Pult-lees! I am thankful for one thing, though. That some radio station always runs an ad for her show, which includes her picture in the Sunday paper. I usually need a new target for my dart board about then.
