

Ellis Glenn's Alleged Brother Said to Have Been in Parkersburg Last Week.

Elbert Glenn, the mysterious brother of Ellis Glenn, who she says is responsible for all the crimes with which she is charged, has been in Parkersburg within the last few days and has actually been in the court room in disguise since the trial of Ellis Glenn was commenced last week. Such, at least, is the assertion of her counsel, Charles T. Caldwell.

It will be remembered that the person who lived at Marietta and Williamstown and who had the business transactions with Wm. Richardson for which Ellis Glenn is now under indictment was known as Bert Glenn, or Elbert Glenn or E. B. Glenn, and was known as a man. Ellis Glenn, the woman, claims that she has a brother Elbert B. Glenn, who looks very much like her, and that it must have been he who lived in Williamstown, as she never did.

This brother, though often heard of since her arrest, has been by many people considered a myth, but Mr. Caldwell says that he cannot only prove by witnesses that he does exist, but that if the worst comes to the worst he can produce Bert himself, although this will not be done unless it is necessary, to save his sister from the penitentiary.

Bert Glenn, Mr. Caldwell says, has been in Parkersburg frequently in the past, and since the trial of Ellis began he has been in the court room, disguised of course, to talk with her about the case. He says that whatever may be the outcome of the case, he can most positively prove the existence of Bert Glenn, a man. He can prove that, he says, by Miss Duke, the Illinois girl to whom Glenn was engaged to be married, and by other persons. And in the event of Ellis Glenn's conviction Bert Glenn will come, he says, and give himself up to save his sister from the penitentiary. She once saved him from the pen and he will do as much for her if it becomes necessary.

Mr. Caldwell says there was no mistake about the conviction of Elbert Glenn in Illinois, but that he was "switched" while on the way to the penitentiary; his sister in masculine attire was substituted for him and he got away. Now if she should be convicted for a crime that he must be guilty of, if either of them is, he would come to her rescue in the same way.

But he does not look for this to happen, as he says Ellis can prove conclusively that she was traveling in England as a gypsy queen at the time the forgery is alleged to have been committed and that she never was in Williamstown.—Sentinel.
