

Tracy: Man faces court

By STUART McCARTNEY
 A MAN was charged yesterday with the murder of 11-year-old Tracy Watters.
 Adam McDermott, 26, appeared briefly on petition before Paisley Sheriff Robert Ingliss.
 Schoolgirl Tracy was found dead in a back garden half a mile from her home in Craigview Avenue, Johnstone, Strathclyde, on February 15.

The charge that McDermott faces is that behind a house in Shanks Crescent, Johnstone, McDermott punched Tracy in the face, seized her, removed some of her clothes and murdered her by compressing her throat.
 Defence lawyer Ross Harper made no plea for McDermott, of McLaurin Crescent, Johnstone. He was remanded in custody and will appear in court again before the end of the month.

Wolf man shocks royal visitor

By DICK DURHAM
 PRINCESS Michael of Kent was attacked yesterday by a man dressed as a wolf.

He leapt out at her, wrapped in a brown cloak and wearing a wolf mask with huge teeth, during a visit to the Ideal Home Exhibition.

He burst through the crowd and lunged at her.

A lady-in-waiting accompanying the Princess said: "He was very tall. You couldn't see his face and the hairy mask and huge teeth."

Composed

"It could have been very frightening but Princess Michael was very composed and took it in her stride."

The man was grabbed by police and taken to Kensington police station for questioning.

Visitors to the exhibition wondered if it was a publicity stunt. If so, it backfired.

A police spokesman said: "Princess Michael was not injured in the attack. A man is helping us with our inquiries."

'I don't know the English words to say how much I love her'

HANDSOME Count Glauco Castelvero gazed adoringly into his stunning girlfriend's eyes yesterday and declared:

"Tula is a beautiful woman. I don't know the English words to say how much I love her."

"What has happened in the past does not matter."

Tulas past is certainly extraordinary. Born a boy, she became one of Britain's top models after a sex-change operation.

Read their remarkable story in today's Daily Star.
