

Transvestism will doubtless grow in future unless male clothing becomes brighter in colour. Psychiatrists find that many males are jealous of their wives and daughters wearing colourful clothes which are denied to them. This has only been for the past 150 years and is against the rules of nature, since all other animals have their males garbed at least as brightly as the female if not more so. This love of colour is inherent in all humans.

A drug now used in case of a likely miscarriage gives a male more than his usual amount of female qualities. It is quite likely the wearing of the more healthy, colourful and comfortable female clothing will be the desire of yet more males and after seeing the uncomfortable males in the heat of this summer is very understandable.

Lewes.

Patricia C. Grice

OBSERVER 7 SEP. 1968