

FACE

Of Glenn Now Shows Uneasiness.

WHEN THE CASE

Was Called She Had a Con- fident Look;

THIS HAS DISAPPEARED.

Strong Evidence is Being Presented Against the Defendant.

Parkersburg, W. Va., July 12—There is no doubt now in the minds of those who have closely followed the Ellis Glenn trial from the beginning that the defendant at bar, claiming to be Ellis Glenn, a sister of Bert Glenn, is the real person wanted and that she is identical with the Bert Glenn of Williamstown. The two positive identifications of the past two days are too strong to be overlooked. While as a matter of course, there will be doubt attached to the identification by Mr. Richardson, owing to the fact that he is the interested party concerned in the prosecution; still it will have a weight with the jury almost as strong as that of a party uninterested in the case. Squire Beeson's positive identification of the defendant as Bert Glenn was the strongest link that had been introduced in the chain of evidence so firmly forged about the prisoner since yesterday morning from the time Mr. Beeson went on the stand. Up until that time there remained that air of mystery about the case that had surrounded it from the first, but immediately afterward, even the defendant seemed to realize that her case was reaching that stage where she might feel slightly dubious of the outcome, in spite of the excellent defense she has had from the first and will have until the last word has been spoken and the case turned over to the jury.

Ellis Glenn is worried. Of that there is no doubt. Day by day she has sat through the case with a bright confident look on her face and constantly waving a palm leaf fan to and fro. After the first positive identification had been made of her she gradually lost her bright look and now sits looking dreamily to the floor or into the distance, while her fan remains idle, as though she was endeavoring to pierce the future and discover what is to be her fate at the hands of the twelve men who sit listening to the evidence that is being bullded practically upon a foundation of stone. Her face has turned to a darker hue than it was when she entered the court room on the first day of the trial. Her lips are as firmly set as ever, but the droop at the corner of the mouth and which was used as a part of evidence by the defense at the first trial, has disappeared only on occasions.

There is a scrap imminent between William Richardson and Attorney Caldwell, if Mr. Richardson lives up to what he said in court this morning when on the stand. Mr. Caldwell asked him if he was telling the "truth or a lie," when he remarked in court yesterday that he committed the forgery in the deed and mortgage book of the county. Mr. Richardson said he would take that language as an insult at the proper time and place.
